Diversity Woman Magazine Features A10 President and CEO in Cover Story

Cary, N.C. –Leah Brown, President and CEO of A10 Clinical Solutions, Inc., is featured in the cover story for the Spring 2012 entrepreneurial issue of Diversity Woman magazine. Brown and three other leading diverse women CEOs are profiled in an article called “Venturesome Visionaries” that focuses on entrepreneurs who bucked convention to turn their passions into extremely successful business enterprises.

The article tells the story about Brown’s desire to turn a family tragedy into an opportunity to help get innovative and lifesaving new drugs to market for all, especially for communities experiencing healthcare disparities. Brown founded A10 in 2004 in honor of her uncle who lost his life to HIV/AIDS at a time when minimal education or therapeutics were available to save him. She now partners with large pharmaceutical companies and government agencies in clinical studies that take into consideration the genomic effect of drugs in differing genders and ethnicity.

Says Diversity Woman publisher Sheila Robinson, “The four tenacious women business leaders in our cover story are at the core of significant leadership change coming as our nation struggles to put the recession in the past. Diverse women are the new breed of successful business game-changers.”

Also featured in this story about “gutsy women with big ideas” are:

- Tena Clark, CEO and Chief Creative Officer of DMI Music & Media Solutions, Pasadena, CA
- Colleen J. Payne, President of MCI Diagnostic Center, Tulsa, OK
- Michele Kang, CEO of Cognosante LLC, McLean, VA

According to research from Babson College, women entrepreneurs could easily add six million more jobs to the U.S. economy within five years if given the same start-up capital opportunities as their male entrepreneurial counterparts.
